

Journal of Race, Gender, and Ethnicity
Volume 9 – May 2020

Table of Contents

I. Foreword

Syndie G.E. Molina

II. Articles

Our Criminal Justice System is a Bear Trap

Frederick K. Brewington

1

Ethical Considerations for Attorneys Researching Jurors on the Internet

Anthony M. LaPinta

7

What Keith Bush's Exoneration Teaches Us About Wrongful Convictions

Oscar Michelen

18

III. Student Notes

The Central Park Five as "Discrete and Insular" Minorities under the Equal Protection Clause: Developments in the Right to Counsel for Wrongfully Convicted Minors

Todd Beharry

25

Confession Obsession: How to Protect Minors in Interrogations

Cindy Chau

57

The Future of Pretrial Detention in a Criminal System Looking for Justice

Gabrielle Costa

78

Police Brutality and State-Sanctioned Violence in 21st Century America

Itohen Ihaza

101

Remorse, Not Race: Essence of Parole Release

Lovashni Khalikaprasad

131

From Common Law to Constitution, Sanctioned Dispossession and Subjugation Through Otherization and Discriminatory Classification

Mobolaji Oladeji 150

Confessions, Convictions, and Controversy: An Examination Of False
Confessions Leading to Wrongful Convictions in the United States
Throughout History

Kirandeep Kaur 170

As Pertains to the Criminal Justice System, Is Hindsight 20/20?

Syndie G.E. Molina and Cristina Negrillo 191

The Inconvenience of Justice: How Unmitigated Official Misconduct
Almost Destroyed the Lives of Five Young Boys From Harlem

Stefania Bordone and David Wright 208

The Methodology of Social Adaptation Following the Liberation of a
Wrongful Conviction

Ashantwa Jackman 253